Unveiling the Surface Morphology of Retractocephalus raphidopalpae Haldar and Chakraborty, 1976 (Apicomplexa: Eugregarinida) Parasitizing the Aulacophora foveicollis Lucas, 1849 (Coleoptera: Chrysomelidae): A Scanning Electron Microscopic Approach

Abstract

The intestinal milieu of insects is a common dwelling place for septate gregarines, a group of parasitic protozoans. Aulacophora foveicollis Lucas, 1849 (Coleoptera: Chrysomelidae), a pest in Cucurbitaceae, exhibits no deviation. Particularly during the rainy season, their prevalence aligns with infection by the septate gregarine Retractocephalus raphidopalpae Haldar and Chakraborty, 1976 (Apicomplexa: Eugregarinida: Conoidasida). Till date, research has not been intensified in the scanning electron microscopy (SEM) of these genera. The primary objective of the present study is to explore the surface morphology of R. raphidopalpae using SEM. Careful isolation of mature gamonts was followed by fixation in a 2.5% glutaraldehyde solution with Na-cacodylate buffer at a pH of 7.4 in preparation for scanning electron microscopy. The epimerite of the trophozoite, characterised by its globular form, retracts into the protomerite. Most gamonts are biassociative and narrowly elliptoid measuring 89-387 μm . Under SEM, the gamonts exhibit a distinctive striated pattern, delineating the epicytic folds that traverse the entirety of their bodily surfaces. The epicytic folds, reminiscent of ridges, ensheath both protomerite and deutomerite, exhibiting longitudinal, parallel, and straight patterns. The density of epicytic folds approximates 5-6 folds per micron. The anterior end of the protomerite exhibits a distinct, smooth region with a diameter of 4.1-4.7 μm , encircled by epicytic folds. The slightly convex terminus of the primite's deutomerite closely interfaces with the concave, sucker-like apical region of the satellite protomerite. This study represents SEM-based first reporting of surface morphology of this genera that can pave the way towards future interventions.

Keywords: Apicomplexa; Septate gregarine; Retractocephalus raphidopalpae; Aulacophora foveicollis

Introduction

Parasitic protozoans, adept at extracting nutrients from their hosts, engender a spectrum of diseases contingent upon species and host susceptibility (Levine, 1988). Insect intestines serve as a preferred habitat for a diverse group of parasitic protozoans, the septate gregarines, where they affix themselves to intestinal epithelial cells, siphoning nourishment from the host's resources (Desportes, et al., 2013). Most septate gregarines are not fatal to their hosts, but they induce significant harm (Lipa, 1967). Infection with septate gregarines slows the growth of red flour beetle larvae and pupae (Giglioli et al., 2016) and reduces grasshopper body weight and food intake (Johny et al., 2000). The red pumpkin beetle, Aulacophora foveicollis Lucas, 1849, a notorious pest of cucurbitaceous crops known for its vibrant red colour and voracious appetite, poses significant challenges to agricultural management strategies worldwide (Kamal, 2014) and exhibits no deviation. During the rainy season, their abundance coincides with the onset of infection by the septate gregarine Retractocephalus raphidopalpae

ABSTRACT

Women represent a large percentage of students in Higher education in 21st century, and in numerous fields, women as learners and educators have made great progress. But it's not enough to understand the present of women in higher education. Because the level of education and its opportunities are depend on various factors like parents' educational level, financial difficulties, social class, misunderstood religious belief, society behavior towards co-education with particular focus to females, the environment of higher educational institutions, difficulties in studies due to domestic responsibility, lack of female teachers in institutions etc. The key purpose of this research is to examine the challenges faced by women in higher education in Bankura district. Literacy rate of the district is 70.95%, however female literacy rates are low at 60.44%, where male literacy rates are high at 80.05%, which leads to a 20% gender literacy gap, according to census of India 2011. Different types of govt initiatives like Kanyashree Prakashya,scholarships,board facilities improves the status and well-being of girls to continue in education for a longer period of time. Girls in the north-western part of the district have a lower tendency to join higher education. This area dominated by poor Rajpi and Harij under the Scheduled Caste (SC) and most of them are hardless labour and unconscious about education. A survey was done to understand the opinion of female about higher education and census data also included to analysis the work

Key words: Women , higher education and challenges.

Abstract

This study explores the dynamic relationship between changing patterns of forest cover and their consequential impact on the socio-cultural landscape, with a specific focus on the Sonamukhi Block in Bankura, West Bengal. The study employs a case study approach to delve into the intricate interplay between environmental transformations and the diverse cultural fabric of the region. Utilizing remote sensing data and on-the-ground assessments, the research scrutinizes the evolving patterns of forest cover over a specified period, shedding light on the factors influencing these changes.

The investigation identifies both natural and anthropogenic drivers contributing to shifts in the forest landscape, including climate fluctuations, land-use practices, and human interventions. Moreover, the study investigates the repercussions of these alterations on the socio-cultural milieu, emphasizing the ways in which local communities, traditions, and livelihoods are intricately linked to the surrounding forest ecosystems.

Keywords

Forest cover, socio-cultural landscape, remote sensing, environmental transformations, anthropogenic activities, livelihood patterns.
